Americans value play, but financial stress continues to limit play time. U.S. Bank, in partnership with Playworks, checked in with Americans across the country in a new survey, analyzing Americans' relationship with play. According to the survey, 98 percent of people said they think play is valuable, 86 percent believe it can relieve stress and yet 38 percent say financial stress prevents them from playing as often as they'd like.

U.S. Bank is responding by committing to reduce these barriers this summer through its Community Possible Month of Play. It starts with the bank investing $6.6 million in local nonprofits supporting play programs and mobilizing 73,000 employee volunteers to help make play possible for 100,000 Americans.

"We believe in the power of play," said Reba Dominski, chief social responsibility officer. "Play brings joy, stimulates creativity and innovation, helps with problem solving, and builds relationships. Play is critical to learning and development, health and creating a focus on the common good in diverse communities. Join us and make a commitment to get out and play during our Community Possible Month of Play."

Throughout July, U.S. Bank employees will surprise communities by paying for tickets to a show or admission to the local zoo, clean-up a neighborhood park, start a game of flag football at a school program, paint faces and even work to create new play spaces. For example, the bank will revitalize and renovate playgrounds and play spaces through signature projects in Cincinnati, Chicago, Denver, Milwaukee, Los Angeles, Seattle and the Twin Cities during July and August.

"During the Community Possible Month of Play, our goal is to make play possible for 100,000 Americans across the country," said Dominski. "So, grab your family, co-workers and friends and get out and play this summer. And tell us about it by sharing your story using #CommunityPossible."

Follow the journey on social media with #CommunityPossible as we make play possible across the country.

Corporate News

Americans value play, but financial stress continues to limit play time. U.S. Bank, in partnership with Playworks, checked in with Americans across the country in a new survey, analyzing Americans' relationship with play. According to the survey, 98 percent of people said they think play is valuable, 86 percent believe it can relieve stress and yet 38 percent say financial stress prevents them from playing as often as they'd like.
